U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
Centers for Disease
Control and Prevention

- March 19 – CDC revises physical distancing guidance based on community transmission and other factors
- Research
 - An evaluation of 172 studies from 16 countries showed a significant reduction in risk with distancing of at least three feet, but no additional benefit at six feet.
 - AAP, WHO, Harvard School of Public Health, and the National Academy of Sciences all have found that three feet provides adequate protection when other health measures are employed.
